After watching the video "I switched to Linux 30 days ago... How did it go?", I've been thinking seriously about migrating from Windows to Linux. The privacy issues with Windows 11, such as the Recall feature and Copilot, along with Microsoft's hardware requirements, are pushing many people toward Linux. I was also impressed by how much better gaming has gotten because of Proton and the success of the Steam Deck. Would I think about moving to Linux? Yes, I would. The amount of control, customization, and freedom from having to update and send data is very appealing. I tried out KDE Plasma on Kubuntu in our virtual machine and really liked how modern and customizable it was compared to GNOME. I still have some doubts, though. My main concerns are that all of my hardware works perfectly with all of my software. If those areas keep getting better, I can see myself making the full switch soon.
